In lieu of our usual registration fee for Virtual Launch Market hosted by the Denver Design District®, we encourage you to make a tax-deductible donation to Food For Thought Denver™. This organization is striving to stop childhood hunger in the Denver-Metro area.

Founded by John Thielen and Bob Bell in 2012, Food for Thought Denver was created when Thielen and Bell became aware that many of Denver's school kids were not getting enough to eat – especially over the weekends. Working with volunteers and their local Arvada Rotary club, they were able to raise enough donated funds to start providing weekend food bags (aka: PowerSacks) to two Denver public schools.

Today, Food for Thought Denver remains a 100% volunteer organization which strives to eliminate weekend hunger – servicing 53 schools in the Denver area. While most of their food recipients qualify for free and reduced breakfast and lunch programs during the school week, many of these kids do not have enough to eat on the weekends. As a result, they have set forth on one simple mission: fill this weekend hunger gap.

Each Friday, individuals, students, and corporate volunteers gather to fill PowerSacks. Each bag contains enough non-perishable food items to feed a family of four for the weekend. The bags are then distributed to the students on Friday afternoons to take home to their families. Their vision is to ultimately live in a community where weekend hunger is no longer a roadblock in a child's path to success.

Thank you, your donations and contributions are greatly appreciated.
